

Age of Revolutions

Age of Revolutions: we often use the word 'Revolution'. But what does it really mean?

Let us try to know the meaning of revolution. Every revolution is change. But every change can not be called revolution. Revolution is a fundamental and long- lasting change. Changes constantly occur in social, political or economic life of any given society. A revolution as a social phenomenal generally means a recognizably momentous changes in any situation or field of activity. At times, the changes are sudden and quick. Sometimes they are prolonged.

But surely they bring about a distinct transformation. In conclusion, we can say that revolution means a fundamental change brought about intentionally. The eighteenth century world witnessed three great revolutions: the American war of Independence, the French revolution and the Industrial revolution.