

Age of Revolutions

The causes leading to these revolutions and settlement of the issues at stake were the notable features of the century roughly spanning the years 1750-1850. This period is generally referred to as the Age of Revolutions. Our modernity is based on the principle of American and French revolutions and the techniques of Industrial Revolution.

The immediate effects of the revolutions were confined to their respective countries concerned. In the course of time; however, the revolutionary principles and ideas captured the imagination of the people of other countries of the world. They have influenced the lives of the people. They have also influenced the world in many other ways.

Friends, let us study the three revolutions in some more details. We have to begin from the American war of Independence.
